Target Fund Manager's Commentary (as at 30 November 2024)

China holds Central Economic Work Conference to make plans for 2025 ; Tencent (00700.HK) Buys Back 1.76M Shares for US$700M.

China holds Central Economic Work Conference to make plans for 2025 China's annual Central Economic Work Conference (CEWC), held on December 11-12, 2024, reinforced a familiar yet urgent narrative: sustaining economic growth remains the country's primary objective. In a comprehensive post-conference readout, the leadership outlined its fiscal and economic priorities for 2025, pledging robust measures to stimulate domestic demand and support the private sector. Boosting domestic demand and investment efficiency: focus will be on stimulating household consumption and enhancing investment returns, signaling a shift to prioritize domestic demand as a key driver of growth. Technological innovation and modern industrial systems: Leveraging scientific and technological innovation, this task aims to modernize industrial systems and strengthen China's global competitiveness. Deepening economic system: By implementing landmark reform measures, the government aims to tackle structural inefficiencies and promote sustainable development. Expanding high-level opening up: Stabilizing foreign trade and investment will remain a priority as China seeks to balance external pressures and maintain its role in global markets. Risk Prevention in Key Areas: Measures will be implemented to address financial and systemic risks, particularly in local government debt and other critical areas. Promoting urbanization and rural revitalization: Urban-rural integration will be advanced through coordinated policies that support modernization in both urban and rural settings. Strengthening regional strategies: Regional development strategies will aim to unlock growth potential and address imbalances across provinces and cities. Accelerating green transition: The government will push for comprehensive eco-friendly transformation to achieve sustainability and carbon reduction goals. Enhancing livelihoods and social stability: Public welfare will be prioritized to improve citizens' quality of life, with a strong focus on maintaining social stability through grassroots governance measures like the "fengqiao experience".

China's Politburo says will implement a more moderately loose monetary policy The big change here is that China says that it will shift towards a "moderately loose" monetary policy. That's a signal that they will go even bigger on easing measures going into next year. It's a notable change on the part of Beijing as they are working rather desperately to try and revive domestic demand conditions. But again, this is all high level commentary and further easing on the part of the PBOC is well expected. The question for a while now has been how much fiscal support can the government really deliver in tandem. And that remains to be seen still.

China's GDP growth expected around 5% this year, senior official says China's economy is expected to grow by about 5 per cent this year, the deputy director of the country's central financial and economic affairs commission said on Saturday (Dec 14). The world's second-largest economy is expected to contribute close to 30 per cent of global growth, Han Wenxiu told an economic conference. Han, who is also a senior official in the ruling Communist Party, said there was a need to boost consumption and view domestic demand expansion as a long-term strategic move that would become the main driving force for economic growth.

Reuters: Chinese authorities are considering a weaker yuan as Trump trade risks loom China's top leaders and policymakers are considering allowing the yuan to weaken in 2025 as they brace for higher U.S. trade tariffs as Donald Trump returns to the White House. The contemplated move reflects China's recognition that it needs bigger economic stimulus to combat Trump's threats of punitive trade measures, people with knowledge of the matter said. Letting the yuan , depreciate could make Chinese exports cheaper, blunting the impact of tariffs, and creating looser monetary settings in mainland China.

China unveils new measures of nine policies to boost foreign trade China unveiled new measures on Thursday (Nov 21) to boost foreign trade, as Beijing battles to turn around a slowing economy threatened further by the potentially hostile policies of incoming US president Donald Trump. Beijing's commerce ministry orders all levels of government to immediately implement nine policies to "promote the stable growth of foreign trade, and consolidate and enhance the economy's upward momentum". The measures included an expansion of export credit insurance, strong financing support for foreign companies and smoother cross-border trade settlements. Other moves aimed to further develop cross-border e-commerce, push exports of speciality agricultural products, and more support for imports of "key equipment, energy resources and other products".
