With the first US interest rate cut now done, we are on the pathway to interest rate normalisation after an extended period of high rates to bring down inflation. Whilst the speed of rate cuts and the optimal level will be debated by market participants, we believe that the first Fed cut is an important turning point confirming that inflationary concerns are meaningfully subdued and that the focus is now on ensuring economic growth and stability. Additional rates cuts should continue to free up consumer budgets and make companies more willing to invest. With some greater certainty here, we believe that the environment for CAPEX decision making, particularly post the US election, should improve. We are also watching developments in China with interest as the recent stimulus announcements appear to have been well received by the market. China continues to be an important market for many industrial equipment makers and an improvement in demand, after a prolonged period of weakness, would be welcome.

The Q3 earnings season has so far been encouraging, with strong CAPEX trends coming from the semiconductor industry continuing and some tentative signs of an improving Industrial economy. During 2023, it was apparent that inventories had been accumulated following the supply chain challenges and the slower than anticipated recovery in Chinese investment activity meant there was a lengthy process for these excess inventories to be worked through. The Institute for Supply Management (ISM) Manufacturing PM has improved a little so far this year, but remains volatile and is lacking a clear trend. The US manufacturing environment has been weak for almost 2 years now, and we anticipate that over the coming quarters we should see some of the impacts of the various Infrastructure ACTs start to be more notable in improving activity levels. Whilst these acts were signed in to law a while ago, (Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act in November 2021, Chips and Science Act in August 2022, Inflation Reduction Act in August 2022), relatively little of the allocated budget has been distributed and this support isn't anticipated to peak until 2026.

We have also noted other indications of industrial activity such as Japanese machine tool orders continue to recover in 2024 and they have now turned positive, indicating the machinery cycle is improving in Japan. We would note that these data series often exhibit some volatility and would avoid reading too much into monthly fluctuations, but it is encouraging to see the improvements and we will be carefully watching this trend over the coming months to determine the shape of the recovery in the manufacturing sector. Chinese activity levels continue to be more muted, and whilst the Chinese market remains significant, we believe that its importance has reduced versus prior cycles due to the reshoring/nearshoring activities that are being seen around the world.
